Queensland Education Leadership Institute

What is the Queensland Education Leadership Institute?

Queensland Education Leadership Institute Ltd (QELi) is a not-for-profit organisation, committed to developing effective education leaders. QELi has partnerships with sectors, educational leaders and teachers to support the delivery of education leadership that is responsive, targeted and accessible for all education leaders across the state.

Educational leadership offered by principals and other school leaders is a critical factor in the performance of schools, the quality of teaching, and the educational experiences of students. National and international studies emphasise that strong and effective school leadership is a central feature of high performing schools and is a necessary precondition for improved student outcomes.

The challenge is to support school leaders to continue to develop their professional capabilities to lead whole school improvement and implement effective strategies that raise the achievement of all students.

To enable access to high quality professional learning the QELi's primary purpose is to facilitate access to professional learning programs that embed best practice, are informed by current and emerging needs and that focus on developing the necessary professional skills, knowledge and understanding to enable continuous school improvement.

What does the QELi mean for Catholic education?

The Executive Director of Queensland Catholic Education Commission, Dr Lee-Anne Perry, is a member the QELi Board. Educators in the Catholic sector are encouraged to participate in professional learning programs and events offered by the QELi and access research available on the QELi website.
